HAUPTMANN JUDGES' PAST FORECAST A STRICT PROCEDURE, NO BIG SHOW

Trenchard Decisions Are Rarely Reversed—Is A Man of the Old School—Justice Robbins Is A Typical "Country Gentleman"—Owns Large Farm Near Flemington.

This is the second of a series of 12 articles on the forthcoming trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, by one of America's greatest reporters.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 11—(INS)—Two distinguished justices—one 71 years of age, the other 55—will preside at the trial opening January 2 of Bruno Richard Hauptmann on the charge of murdering the Lindbergh baby.

They are Associate Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard and Common Pleas Judge Adam O. Robbins.

Decorum will prevail at the trial. This is a foregone conclusion with Justice Trenchard—a man of "the old school" in law—in charge of the proceedings. He is not the type to countenance hippodroming in the courtroom.

Justice Trenchard is a tall, dignified, scholarly-looking man with a keen mind and a forceful demeanor. He is noted for his decisive opinions which seldom have been reversed by the Court of Errors and Appeals.

His decisions are clear cut and phrased in terms that are easily comprehended. He has been a member of the Supreme Court for 27 years.

He is exacting in preparation of legal documents and strict in his orders. But he is not considered severe in his rulings and is frequently lenient in adjusting cases.

For a number of years Justice Trenchard has written many important opinions as a member of the Supreme Court and has voted on hundreds of others.

Prior to his appointment to the state bench, Justice Trenchard held several legal positions. In 1899 he was appointed law judge in Bridgeton and in the following year he was named law judge of Cumberland county. He also served as a member of the House of Assembly in 1899.

For several years he was solicitor of Bridgeton, Cumberland county. As a Presidential elector he cast ballots for Presidents McKinley and Hobart. Justice Trenchard read law in the office of Potter and Nixon in Bridgeton and was admitted to the bar as an attorney in 1886 and as counselor in 1893. He practiced law in Bridgeton.

He was born in Centerton, Salem County, N. J., in December 1863. He was educated in the Bridgeton schools and the South Jersey Institute. He is married but has no children. He is patient in giving information concerning himself but is a most delightful gentleman with whom to converse. He lives in Trenton.

Judge Robbins, who will assist Justice Trenchard at the Hauptmann trial, is a typical "country gentleman." He owns a large farm near Flemington.

He was born on a farm owned by ancestors who settled in Hunterdon county a century ago. He is 55 years old, married and has a daughter. When his judicial duties are not occupying his attention he devotes his time to his farm.

Judge Robbins has presided over several important trials in Hunterdon and Mercer counties. He presided at the trial of John Hughes Curtis, the Norfolk, Va., shipbuilder, who perpetrated the famous Lindbergh case hoax. This case was held at Flemington.

He also presided at the widely publicized case of two state troopers who participated in the "Battle of Jutland" which resulted in the death of Miss Beatrice Meany. Judge Robbins sentenced both troopers to the state prison.

Judge Robbins presides in Mercer county as well as Hunterdon county. He was admitted to the bar in 1900 and practiced law for several years. He has been on the bench for the past twelve years and is now beginning his third term.

And so these are the two men who will render decisions throughout the celebrated Hauptmann trial. They will decide points of law for the battery of legal talent that will participate in the case.

Heading the prosecution will be Attorney General David T. Wilentz, the former newspaper man and world war veteran. Wilentz will be assisted by Prosecutor Anthony M. Hanck of Hunterdon county, by Assistant Attorney Joseph L. Lanigan and others.

The chief defense lawyer will be Edward J. Reilly, of Brooklyn, who has tried more than 1,000 murder cases in New York and New Jersey in the past 25 years. He will be assisted by Lloyd Fisher of Flemington.

Tomorrow: Hauptmann's attitude as his trial approaches.

Trenton Man Is Charged With Reckless Driving

Charged with reckless driving, Walter Eggert, 1635 E. State street, Trenton, N. J., was released under $300 bail last evening for a further hearing next Monday evening at eight o'clock. The hearing last night, following an automobile accident at Walnut street and the highway, was presided over by Justice of the peace James Guy, in the municipal building.

Eggert, who was driving a truck for the Pure Oil Company of Trenton, N. J., was proceeding east on the highway. His machine and that of Miss Victoria Ostroski, crashed at Walnut street and the highway, the truck allegedly striking the machine of Miss Ostroski in the rear. The young woman suffered a bruised ankle.

The Trenton man testified at the hearing that he was endeavoring to "make" the traffic light; and Miss Ostroski stated that she proceeded to cross the highway on a green light.

WALKATHONS ATTRACT ATTENTION OF STATE

Exact Appalling Toll Upon Health and Morale of The Contestants

FEW HAVE BEEN CLOSED

By John W. Seotzin
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG, Dec. 11—(INS)—The tortuous grind of the so-called "walkathon," in which contestants dance or walk continually for periods usually stretching into months, has attracted the official attention of the State Department of Labor and Industry.

"Walkathons" or "Marathons" as they are often termed, have mushroomed into a thriving business throughout the state but officials charge they exact an appalling toll upon the health and morale of the contestants.

Only the absence of a direct state law prevents the state department through its Bureau of Industrial Standards from launching a general and immediate clean-up of establishments sponsoring "walkathons," according to John Campbell, director of the bureau.

However, the bureau has closed a number of establishments and is investigating others by invoking two state laws applicable to conditions similar to those prevalent at "walkathons," Campbell said.

Communities in which "Walkathons" are operated are also enabled to "crack down" on the establishments by invoking an old law, the State Act of 1903, which empowers them to ban athletic exhibits of more than 12 hours' duration a day, Campbell disclosed.

The Department's indirect weapons are based on the provisions of the State Woman's Law, which prohibits employment of women under 21 years of age beyond 9 o'clock at night and only six days a week, and the State Fire and Panic Act of 1929 which requires a certain number of fire exits and emergency lighting systems.

Establishments sponsoring walkathons frequently attempt to evade the provisions of the Woman's Law, Campbell pointed out, by contending that the participants are not being compensated for their efforts but are merely participating for a prize that is offered to the sole survivor.

The Bureau, however, asserts that meals, shoes, clothing and other essentials granted the contestants constitute compensation, thus placing the grueling affairs under provisions of the law as far as the women are concerned.

DOYLESTOWN FAIR ENDS YEAR WITH SMALL PROFIT

One of the Few Fairs In State To Finish "Out Of The Red"

HEAR ANNUAL REPORT

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 11—The 12th annual Doylestown Fair finished the year with a small but satisfactory profit as one of the very few fairs in Pennsylvania that went through the season "out of the red."

That was the very encouraging report submitted at the annual meeting of the Doylestown Fair Association held in the Bucks County Administration Building. The report was submitted by J. Allen Gardy, of Doylestown, fair secretary, and was unanimously approved and accepted by the fair officials and directors present.

Dr. H. W. Turner, of New Hope, president of the fair, commented at length on the 1934 results that showed a profit in spite of a rain-out Saturday. At the same time he announced that hundreds of comments have been heard from people in all walks of life who described the twelfth annual fair at Doylestown as "the best in the history of the organization."

Plans are being made for 1935, when the thirteenth annual will be presented as the "good luck fair" rather than a hoodoo that superstition says usually goes with that famous numeral. Plans for a much-improved program of free acts in front of the grandstand both afternoon and evening next year, have been adopted, although there will be another outstanding feature for the night fair.

It is planned to have another opening-day feature in 1935 similar to Ward Beam's Congress of Daredevils who brought out the biggest opening-day crowd in the fair's history.

The 1935 fair dates were selected last night. They are September 24 to 28 inclusive, six nights and five days. These dates follow the week of the Allentown Fair as usual.

Dr. H. W. Turner, who has been the very efficient president of the fair association since its organization, was re-elected to that office last night. Other officers re-elected included the following: vice-presidents, Horace B. Wilkus, Philadelphia, and Burroughs Michener, Doylestown; treasurer, Robert Engart, Doylestown; secretary, J. Allen Gardy, Doylestown.

Round Out Great Program For Suppression of Crime

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11—(INS)—Responding to the call of President Roosevelt for the backing of every man, woman and adolescent child in the cause of law enforcement the National Crime Conference today started deliberations that are expected to result in the greatest program yet conceived by the Federal Government for the suppression of crime.

Calling upon the delegation from all the states of the Union, representing 88 organizations interested in law enforcement, the President, in opening the conference last night, asked for a constructive program of action in which the people might participate.

FRICTION IN BALKANS AVERTED BY COMPROMISE

League Council Adopts Resolution At Midnight Session

'EXPULSIONS CONTINUE'

GENEVA, Dec. 11—(INS)—A compromise with Hungary on the short end and Yugoslavia on the long—has laid the ghosts of King Alexander and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou, but many League of Nations observers wondered today if further friction in the Balkans had merely been temporarily averted.

Hungary consented to the termination of the quarrel through a resolution that indirectly blamed "certain Hungarian authorities" for complicity in the Marseilles assassinations only after repeated telephone conversations between leaders. It was finally adopted by the League Council by unanimous vote at a midnight session—the first night meeting in six years.

With the Yugoslavian-Hungarian question sidetracked at least until the January session, the League Council directed its attention today to cleaning up details of the January 13 Plebiscite in the Saar Basin.

Hungarian representatives in Geneva were far from completely satisfied with the resolution, and were more openly condemnatory of other aspects of the Yugoslavian attitude.

One of Eckhardt's last comments this morning was to charge that the refugee situation in Hungary was steadily getting worse, and that the Yugoslav promises to halt expulsions had not been kept.

37 PERISH IN HOTEL FIRE

Lansing, Michigan, Dec. 11—Fire Chief Hugo R. Dells said at 10 a. m. today that at least 37 persons had perished in the Kerns Hotel fire early this morning. Chief Dells said he had been unable to check the number of bodies recovered but that he arrived at the death toll estimate of 37 by comparing reports brought in by his men who were going into the ruins.

The Coroner's office said at 9.30 a. m. it has official reports of six deaths resulting from the Kerns Hotel fire. Five died of the injuries they suffered when jumping from windows, said Coroner H. Leadley, and one body was recovered from the Grand River. Leadley said he believed other bodies had been found in the river but had not yet been reported.

The hotel was filled with state legislators called to Lansing for a special session. The only two dead, immediately identified, were State Representative P. Henry Howlett, of Howell, Michigan, and I. Wisniewski of Los Angeles. Three others, a woman and two men, jumped from windows to the icy streets and died of their injuries on the way to Sparrow Hospital. Police said four more bodies were taken from the Grand River in which many others trapped in the hotel were believed to have drowned.

The trapped guests leaped from windows into the river which flowed along one wall of the building. Firemen and officials could only guess at how many victims lay among the smoking ruins. No check of the guest list was possible because the register was destroyed by the flames.

PARADISE, DICTATED
Dictators never stop to think that one man's play may be another man's hard labor. If they say it's play it must be play, and that's all there is to it.

Consequently, the paradise which Senator Garrido, 44-year-old governor of the State of Tabasco, Mexico, has dictated for the area over which he has held absolute political control since the de la Huerta revolution of 1924, the last four years as governor, may seem to many of his constituents to be no paradise at all. Senator Garrido appears to be a lily painter extraordinary. For him Utopia is not enough; he must perfect it.

At any rate, that is about what one gathers from an interview in which the young dictator says his objective is "to create a community without religion, vices, egotism, or laziness—a community of workers." Bees and ants have achieved in fair degree an objective like that, but they have ways of getting rid of the non-workers, of the lazy fellows. Has Senator Garrido gone to the ants to find out what to do with sluggards that he speaks so hopefully of his ambition to eliminate laziness from the blessed land of Tabasco?

If the world learns by trial and error, it should learn much about government in these days of universal experiment in governing people in the ways they should go. All the world was once a stage; to-day it seems to be one vast laboratory in which the chemists of government are engrossed with their retorts.

Senator Garrido has resigned from the governorship of Tabasco to become secretary of agriculture in the new federal cabinet at Mexico City. His successor, however, will be a trusted lieutenant, one on whom he can depend to convert Tabasco into a paradise as dictated.

HITCH-HIKING DANGEROUS

Transcontinental hitch-hiking is soon to come to an end. Public opinion is concluding that the practice is too dangerous to youth, and that conclusion is finding expression in law.

Virginia, Connecticut, New Jersey, the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Minnesota, Wisconsin and other states have legislated to forbid or to regulate the soliciting of rides, and penalties vary from small fines to terms of imprisonment.

Those who remember the good old horse-and-wagon days, when only the "meanest man in the neighborhood" would refuse a wayfarer a ride, may feel a pang of regret at trends of our modern "civilization." Some even may suggest that if the law were a little more efficient in checking criminals it would not be necessary to use law to check the neighborly and humane impulse.

Be that as it may, the fact remains that hitch-hiking has proved a menace both to those who catch rides and to those who extend the courtesy.

Dizzy Dean, a good sport, knows what he is worth but is willing to compromise for $25,000 a year.

Elmer Bright, of Richland township, was also a witness of the alleged assault.

"I heard Rice call for help," Pearl Bright, 14, who was with her father on the morning of Nov. 23, described a tussle between Rice and Dieterly from which Rice emerged bleeding.

Taking the stand in his own behalf, Herbert Dieterly, 18, near Quakertown, testified he was hunting rabbits on his own property November 23. "I walked out to the road toward Mr. Rice to tell him that the story he was telling about my stealing a dog was not true."

Dieterly explained that Rice began pushing him around, and he picked up his gun.

Dieterly denied that he attacked Rice with a gun in his hand, or pointed it at him.

The last case on trial before Judge Calvin S. Boyer during the present term of court, is a cross action in which G. Parker Reigel, George Rhoades, of Durham; John M. Ziegler and Mrs. Agnes Ziegler, are both prosecutors and defendants. The charges are aggravated assault and battery and assault and battery, growing out of a neighborhood dispute. Ziegler and his wife are represented by a Philadelphia attorney, who it is reported, was summoned by officials of the Bucks County Farmers' Protective Association. Thomas Ross, of Doylestown, is attorney on the opposite side.

CHAPTER XXIV

Something about the man on the lawn was familiar. Kay was not sure what it was; his gait probably, or the outline of his figure, for she had had no clear glimpse of his face and could have told nothing about his clothes.

She stood there by the door, peering out, but she no longer saw a man.

He was looking into the lighted living room, she supposed. Thinking quickly, she realized that he could not get into the house without making noise enough for her to hear. There were screens on every window and both the front and back doors, as well as the sun-porch door, were locked.

She could slip to the telephone and call the police as quietly as possible. She hesitated a moment, then abandoned the idea; there were two reasons: the man might hear her and make trouble or at least escape, and Harrow had not intended to call in the police yet. She realized that instinctively she had associated this prowler with the Harrow trouble. This might be the man sent to "get" Harrow through her. In that case, Harrow should know.

The best thing, then, would be to warn Harrow at once and in such a way that the man might not be alarmed; might be captured so as to help clear up the mystery. There was only one thing to do.

Kay drew a deep breath and walked boldly into the lighted living room, expecting any second to hear the screen crash, or to hear a shot or a command to halt. There was no sound, though, save for the ticking of the clock and the rattling of the palm fronds in the growing breeze outside the house.

She walked casually to a chair, picked up a magazine which lay in it, face down, looked at it critically, shut it, put it on the table, then turned to a book shelf and scanned the titles. Selecting a book—she had no idea which one—she yawned quite candidly, and looked up at the clock as if debating the question of going to bed. She walked to the hall, snapped on the stair light, then turned and switched off the light in the living room, the book under her arm, and started slowly upstairs.

She went into her room and turned the top light on there, stood near the window and started to pull off her dress. That should be convincing enough to anyone outside who wondered if she planned to retire. As with sudden realization, she snatched the window shade and pulled it down; then, back away from the window, she put the dress on.

Kay stole out into the hall and back downstairs, stopping every few steps to listen carefully. If the man still hung about the house he certainly was being quiet; he knew his business only too well.

Crouching and avoiding the moonlight that came into the house, she tiptoed back to the kitchen and looked out. The yard was brightly lit in the moonlight and there was no motion, no disturbing shadow anywhere. Bit by bit, she turned the key in the lock until the door was open. With her ear to the slight creak, she listened carefully. All she heard was her friend, the lugubrious whippoorwill, and the wind in the palms, and the rumble of the wooden bridge that indicated an automobile was crossing the river down at the corner.

Kay opened the door farther and farther until she was able to slip out; then again she turned the lock slowly, carefully, her ears straining to catch any sudden sound that would send her flying back into the house. At last, though, the door was locked and she was stealing away.

Her bicycle stood at the back porch. She reached it and took it by the handlebars, pushing it slowly across the lawn until she was behind a dense growth of bamboo. Again she stopped to listen and to look back. She saw nothing suspicious, but that did not mean definitely that the prowler had gone. Naturally, her plan having worked, he would be on the lighted side of the house, watching her bedroom, or trying to climb the porch and enter it.

She pushed her bicycle around the shrubbery, across the lawn, through the little gap in the hedge and into the next yard. Then, mounting it, she pedaled rapidly down the winding drive and out upon the sidewalk of Halifax avenue. Under the foliage from the arching branches of trees and the oleanders that grew along the street parkage, she could speed away with little danger of being seen.

It occurred to her only then as she raced along the sidewalk toward the bridge that she might have been foolish in leaving Dave and Harry, the roomers, as quietly as possible. She certainly had not intended to call in the police yet. She realized that instinctively she had associated this prowler with the Harrow trouble. This might be the man sent to "get" Harrow through her. In that case, Harrow should know.

The man stepped aside without so much as a glance at her. From the peninsula shore she could see that there were still many lights burning on the Commander III.

At the dock she threw the wheel aside and ran aboard the boat. One of the "muggs" appeared from somewhere and blocked her way. But he recognized her; she, him. "I have to see Mr. Harrow," she panted.

"I'm going to leave one of the boys here. I'll post him in the bushes near your bedroom window, Kay. You're coming back to the boat with us, and when we get to a phone you're going to call your house and raise one of those men. Tell him where you are, what's happened, and that there's a man watching outside. Tell him to go back to bed and not to pay attention to anything that may happen. Tell him to sneak into your room and switch off the light so that anybody watching would think you'd finally gone to sleep."

"All right," Kay said. "Let's go, then, concluded Harrow, crisply. Kay admired his coolness, his competence."

Kay was a long time falling asleep that night on the yacht. Still excited by the affair of the prowler, still worried as to its consequences, and considerably aware of the strangeness about her on the boat, she lay trying to think through the situation, but it was no use. Nothing was solved; nothing was even half-way clear to her; maybe nothing ever would be.

Only one thing was certain and that one thing was what disturbed her the most; there had been something familiar about the man skulking in the yard. She thought of the men whose affairs were now involved with hers. There was Harrow, but surely he could not have left his car and come sneaking up into the bushes so quickly. Furthermore, why should he have done anything of the sort? Well then, there was Spike. Spike and Harrow had quarrelled over her; that was true. Spike knew all Harrow's business; Spike, for all his understanding friendship, had a frank and strong desire for her. But that frankness alone was enough to weigh against the possibility of his having been prowling in her yard.

There were the "muggs," Kelly and Wagner, hired to guard Earl Harrow. And again, why should either of them have been sneaking around her house? As for the men, whoever they were, who were plotting against Harrow, she was sure she never had seen them. Who, then, could it have been? And why had he been there?

In the morning when the sun came streaming in upon her, Kay could not imagine for a moment where she was. The sight of the yacht club across the glistening water seemed decidedly out of place and the bed felt strange. Gradually she began to review the events that had brought her here, and now in the bright morning sun in such clean and beautiful surroundings, the whole business seemed to be a bad dream. But her mere presence on the boat denied that.

Lying lazily in the soft bed, she suddenly realized that the mystery of the prowler might have been settled during the night. She jumped up, had a shower and began to dress rapidly.

Harrow was on deck with Captain Johnson. When he saw her the producer excused himself and joined her.

"Sleep well?" he asked cheerfully.

"Perfectly—after a nully got over the excitement. But, did anything happen? Did they catch him?"

Harrow shook his head. "Sorry to say, he didn't come back. Wagner checked in this morning looking like a cucumber after his night in the bushes with the mosquitoes."

"Then we're no better off than we were?" Kay said. "You've no idea, I mean, who it was?"

"Not exactly; no. But I expected it. And the best part of it is that nothing happened. Kay, I'm awfully sorry about this silly business. I dragged you into it. But I wouldn't have for the world. It's something utterly unexpected—here in Dayton, that is—and it seems a shame just when there were so many pleasant things to do. It's cutting into my schedule, too."

"You have been delayed here haven't you?"

"Yes, and I may a few days longer. But then"—and he raised his shoulders slightly and smiled—"it'll all come out in the wash."

"I hope so."

"You do, eh?" she observed sincerely.

"You're a nice person, Kay. Owen I'll admit I can't understand you altogether, but you're a nice sort of guy."

"Thank you," she said. "You're pretty nice yourself, you know. I'm sorry if you can't understand me, as you say. I'm not so complex, really. I'm a very simple soul, I'm afraid."

Carry Aged Invalid To Safety In Tenement Fire

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 11.—(INS.)—A 76-year-old woman invalid was carried to safety by firemen, and 35 other persons, including many children, were driven out into the bitter cold today when a two-alarm fire swept three tenement houses.

Mrs. J. N. Horton, 76, who had been ill in bed, was rescued by firemen who responded to an alarm turned in by two patrolmen who discovered the blaze.

Extreme cold hampered efforts of firemen who concentrated their efforts in preventing the spread of the fire to other wooden tenements nearby. The blaze started in a garage between two tenement houses.

Million Trees Will Decorate Homes In Pennsylvania

New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Maine, Wisconsin, New York, West Virginia,

New Hampshire, Washington, and Ontario supplying the bulk. The imports are usually white spruce, red spruce, balsam fir, and Douglas fir. Native pines, hemlocks, and cedars are also used.

The larger cities, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Scranton, and Wilkes-Barre, use most of the imported greens. Rural districts and small towns usually purchase native Christmas trees, according to Keller.

Pennsylvania will spend about $2,000,000 for Christmas greens, not including the cost of holly and mistletoe from the South. Prices for imported trees range from 25 cents to $15, while homegrown stock averages 75 cents.

Although the State Forests belong to the people of Pennsylvania, the trees are grown primarily for timber production, and the Department of Forests and Waters warns against the unauthorized Christmas tree cutting.

A State law provides a fine of $25 for every tree removed or damaged. The law applies to privately owned land as well as to State land.

"For the best selection of trees, it is wise to follow the time honored adage, Buy Early," said Keller. "Trees bought several weeks before Christmas should be stored in cool places out of the sun and wind to avoid drying and defoliation. Shaving the dry wood from the butt and placing the tree in water supplies moisture to the stem and needles and usually insures greenness for an additional period."

Friction In Balkans Averted By Compromise

Hungary was dissatisfied, too, with the significant use of the word "unifier." In the resolution's phrase condemning "this odious crime" of the assassination of "the knightly King Alexander I of Yugoslavia, the Unifier."

The unification of the South Slavs, for which Alexander was responsible, took away from Hungary several million Croat citizens. Alexander as unifier, represents the epitome of the opposition to Hungary's ambitions for revision of the peace treaties, and the League Council's resolution is regarded as a blow to those hopes.

The Council also provided for a committee composed of representatives of Belgium, Britain, France, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Rumania, Spain, Switzerland and Soviet Russia, to draft "an international convention to assure the repression of conspiracies or other crimes committed with political or terrorist purposes."

This convention, it is expected, will be along the lines of the French proposal for an international court.

HIGH SCHOOL SOCCER TOURNAMENT AT END

Last week on the high school field an intermural soccer tournament was held under the supervision of Coach W. E. Dougherty. The result was a tie between the strong Senior class and the Sophomores, who battled to a 6-6 deadlock on Friday.

The tournament was announced as a tie as it seemed any further play would break up the relationship between the classes. The teams will have joint hold on the plaque which is awarded to the winners.

The rest of the tournament was chock full of interesting games, with the Seniors and the Sophomores, the ultimate winners, furnishing most of the thrills. Many strong eleven were eliminated by these two clubs.

MOVING PICTURE STAR TO BOWL ON ALLEY HERE

By E. C. Yates
E. J. O'Boyle, owner and proprietor of the Bristol Recreation Center, has engaged the services of Andy Varipapa, the world's most sensational bowler and trick shot artist, to exhibit his achievements at the Recreation Center, Saturday afternoon and evening.

"Andy," as he is commonly known among his acquaintances, will make a personal appearance at the afternoon and early evening performances at the Grand Theatre on Saturday, when the M-G-M picture of "Strikes and Spares," in which he stars, will be shown on the screen. This picture was staged at Hollywood and numerous and interesting points are shown of Andy's ability to manipulate the 16-pound sphere on the 60-foot alley, which brands him as the world's most sensational bowler of today.

"Andy" will instruct, exhibit and play match games against various local talent on Saturday afternoon at three, and also nine p. m.

The purpose of bringing the world-renowned bowler to Bristol is to increase the interest in this indoor sport which has become popular in Bristol through the efforts of Mr. O'Boyle.

Philadelphia has just closed its "Learn to Bowl" week and the various alleys have been very much encouraged with their accomplishment which resulted in a large increase of both male and female bowlers and also taught many of the experienced bowlers some ways to correct their faults and increase their scores.

"Andy," in addition to his fame for being a trick shot artist, is also an accomplished bowler, uses a fast-breaking hook ball which is considered the most effective style when proper control is mastered. Andy has had quite a successful week in Philadelphia, having met the best of that vicinity, but not always victorious, which is the reason that bowling is such an interesting pastime, as in individual short matches almost anything can happen, but in the longer set of matches the experienced bowler generally comes out on top. This is what may happen on either Saturday afternoon or evening when a number of local players will endeavor to gain the reputation of having defeated this world-renowned bowler.

The fame of bowling a "300" score on the Bristol alleys has never been achieved by any bowler, local or other, since their installation. It is hoped that "Andy" will accomplish this feat for the satisfaction of the hundreds of fans who expect to watch him and who have never witnessed this event. Andy rolled his 31st 300 score in Philadelphia last week and a number of games in which one pin stood up marked others which would have been perfect scores also.

The opposition for local representation will not be decided upon until the elimination contest which will be open all week ending Thursday night, has been completed. The contest will be open to all bowlers who will roll three games and those having the highest totals for the match will be allowed to appear in one of the games to be played in the afternoon or evening. The number of players which will be drawn will be either six or eight, depending upon the program which will be arranged at a later date.

BOY HELD FOR MURDER

Lancaster, Dec. 11—Only vaguely comprehending the proceedings, 15-year old Paul Speck, Manheim high school sophomore, today was placed on trial for the murder of his father, Steven Speck, last September 9th. The boy is one of the youngest persons ever to be tried for murder in Lancaster county. Since his arrest Paul has been permitted to continue his school work in his cell. The youth shot and killed his father, according to police, after he was dragged out of bed and beaten.

STILL UNDER GUARD

Lebanon, Dec. 11—Byron Lauder-milch, 69-year old lingerie manufacturer remained under guard in the Lebanon Sanatorium, a private hospital, today while police continued their investigation of his friendship with Emma Miller, 28, mother of an 8-year old girl, who was found fatally wounded several hours after leaving for an automobile ride with him. Authorities had admitted Lauder-milch, who is charged with murder, is suffering with a wound in the abdomen, but had declined to discuss the nature of the injury.

FIVE OVERCOME BY GAS

Philadelphia, Dec. 11—Overcome by deadly coal gas fumes, escaping from a defective furnace, five members of a Philadelphia family were carried from their beds early today when their plight was discovered by a sixth resident of the house. The victims were found unconscious from the fumes by Anthony Pickel, 44. After trying to arouse his wife Olga, Pickel rushed through the dwelling opening windows. He then summoned aid and the five victims were taken to a nearby hospital and revived.

HUNGARY NOT ENTHUSIASTIC OVER NEWS

Budapest, Hungary, Dec. 11—Hungary today received without enthusiasm and in some quarters with bitterness, the news of the Geneva compromise in the dispute with Yugoslavia. Implications, however limited, that Hungary was responsible for the assassination of King Alexander, were resented by the press with most newspapers continuing to complain against the treatment of 2977 deportees from Hungary. They demanded those exiled be taken back to Yugoslavia and paid indemnity. The influx of refugees across the border had ceased today.

SNOW THROUGHOUT STATE

By International News Service
